MORE THAN 200 GRADUATES GATHERED last fall for the School of Law’s second Black Law Alumni Reunion, enjoying a weekend of fun, fellowship, and substantive discussions about race, law, and society. A highlight of the weekend was the unveiling of “Thurgood Marshall’s Early Career in Maryland: 1933-1937,” in the Marshall Law Library. Drawing on three decades of research by Professor Larry Gibson, the permanent exhibit reveals little-known facts and stories about the formative years of Marshall’s early law practice, and was unveiled by his widow Cecilia Marshall in a rare public appearance.

A companion exhibit depicted the leadership efforts of Emerson Dorsey ’79 and Judge Andre Davis ’78, with student leaders of the Black Law Students Association, to have the Law Library named in honor of Justice Marshall. “Our first reunion five years ago was such a success, that we had to have another. At the same time, we sought to make this one more substantive, more meaningful, and more fun. I think we succeeded on all counts,” said Dorsey. “We discussed some very important issues in the African American community today, raised awareness about how the Law School faculty is addressing these issues, and reconnected with friends and colleagues from all over the country.”
